1. Thinking Critically, Thinking Creatively – Thursday, February 24, 2022

Innovation and creativity are critical. The groundwork for this expansive mindset is the ability to think critically – to consider all possibilities, opportunities and challenges when making decisions. In this course, learners will examine and expand their own mindset around their own thinking habits, the assumptions and biases that inform them and the results of their decision-making processes. This course will support learners' capacity to make better decisions and will lay the foundation for innovative thinking and creativity in the workplace.

2. The Me in Team – Wednesday, March 30, 2022

The ability to work effectively in a team is critical to workplace success and job satisfaction; individual behaviours can either support, or detract from, a positive team environment.

In this course, learners will explore how they create relationships, and examine the conditions and culture necessary to facilitate an environment that supports individual and team performance. Learners will assess their role in the team environment, as leaders and as team members, and identify tools and strategies for contributing effectively to a high functioning team.

3. Authenticity in Action – Tuesday, April 26, 2022

Being a leader requires that you show up and be seen. In this course, learners will explore how they show up in their work and what holds them back. Through activities and discussions, learners will gain a deeper understanding of their relationship to risk-taking, vulnerability and authenticity and how these concepts underpin how they want to show up in their role.

4. Your Brain in Positive - Tuesday, May 24, 2022

For a community to thrive, it is dependent on individuals to find relevance and meaning that benefits themselves, groups, organizations, and communities. In this course, learners will explore techniques to enhance their fulfillment whether at work or at play. Tools to build resiliency, to re-wire our brains to positive, to explore what it is to flourish to find meaning and fulfilment will lead learners on a path of well-being that will be personally and professionally significant.
